Introduction

Figure.1
Chanel, her life

Chanel bag is the one, which was every woman desire to have; especially the Chanel 2.55 flap bag. Chanel brand was established by Gabrielle Chanel who started from a hat business in Paris around 1910 and expanded her business to clothing, perfume and accessories. In the mid-1920s the “little black dress” creates a new look for the women and became a remarkable design of Chanel. (Astrologo and Schiffer 2007, p.90) As famous of the little black dress that Chanel gradually found its position, which are elegance and exclusivity so the prices of the Chanel’s products are high.

Not only the little black dress make a big profit for Chanel but also the Chanel No.5 perfume which is an endless product of the brand. Therefore, Chanel will be look as a high end and luxury market. This report will be narrow down to the accessorise market focusing on bag, Chanel bag become popular in 1950s because women in that period wanted to express a different femininity to the austere war years. As a result, the iconic Chanel 2.55 bag was birth in that period with the idea of the practical shoulder bag, which is easier for women to carry on the street. (Cox 2007, p.74) Thus, the Chanel bags became another target for the fashionable women and gain a high amount of income for the company. Then by using the PESTLE analysis to illustrate the micro marketing environment of Chanel 2.55 flag bag in below.

PESTLE analysis

Political

Nowadays, the fashion market starts to spread to abroad so in order to protect their own fashion brand so that some countries are still having a high imported tariff such as China. However, there are many international brands open their boutiques in China recently that it has already become a biggest luxury market all over the world. According to the report that Chinese people to buy luxury goods in the Europe market is nearly $50 billions, which is four times sales in China. (Dyson 2011) Therefore, the high tariff might influence the total sales in China, also like other Asian countries. The taxes issue might also affect the western countries, for example, the 50p tax rate in Britain could let the wealthy people to decrease spend on the luxury objects. There is a journal said that the 50p tax might be cancel after 2015 but before this policy abolish the high end market still might be impact on it. Generally, the high tariff and tax rate could halt down the luxury market because those expensive products are bought by those wealthy people, if they don't get the proper and sensible tax on it, they might not spend more money on those luxury products. Therefore, it might be a trend to let those having high tax policy countries to reduce their tariff on the luxury product.

Economical

Due to the recession in recent years, many businesses have been a slump, however, the luxury market did not have a big drop in this recession because of the emerging economies, particularly in Asia. For instance, LVMH has reported a big jump in profits thanks to the luxury goods that there is a high request from emerging economies countries. (BBC News 2011) Although the economic recession did not impact so much on luxury brands, the inflation it is exist because of the oil crisis and the developing countries, which might affect the luxury goods. It has been shown from the Graph.1 that the luxury price inflation is incredibly higher than the overall price inflation in China. As a result, the consumers might not buy those luxury products, especially for those middle class generations. (Graph.2) On the other hand, it is also possibly that like Chinese people those who did not because of the high price to stop buying luxury goods. As the inflation they would like to put their money on those "valuable" product also could keep it worthy so they might decide to invest the brand's stocks or buying luxury products like Chanel bag.

Sociological

Increasing number of countries have turned into aging population society, so there are more senior in the world especially Europe. “People aged 60 and over make up nearly 25 percent of the European population, compared with 16 percent in the US.” (Okonkwo 2011, p.608) It might be a problem for those geographers but not for the luxury market. Since those seniors have high disposable income so they could spend more money on luxury products. In addition, for Chanel itself its original target customers are in the age 40s above so will not have a big impact on the brand also it might cause a positive influence because of the emotional connection between those seniors and young generations that might give younger consumers a special view of point toward this luxury brand. Despite of the aging population, the multi-culture also became another social trend, as the huge Chinese millionaires and the rising Indies’s market, more and more luxury brands are toward to the Asia marketplace. It might be a big change for Chanel because it might need to create and fuse some oriental elements that let Asian more acceptable. However, Chanel bag may not face this problem because the design of Chanel 2.55 bag is unique and timeless.

Technological

In this century, the social media is massive also it is an important bridge between company and the customers. First, the magazines are an vital part of the fashion but nowadays there are more people are using blog, Facebook and Titter to express their idea when they have any comment on those fashionable product they are promoting it at the same time. Likewise, Chanel has its own official website giving all the basic information for the costumers but it is not enough. The customers now are eager to know more about inside such as the idea of the creation so the Chanel News come for it. Besides, the common of the smart phone that more customers fancy for getting quite click on their phone so Chanel also has its own application for those 3G addict. Moreover, the online shopping is also another new trend recently and the future but Chanel have not got an official online shopping link on its website which might be an extra element needs to be improved.

Legislation

“Trade policies have had the most significant impact on the growth in international trade and the geography of production.”(C.Mead 2011, p.302) After China reforming their trade policy, many companies which including Chanel start to relocate their textile industry in China because of the cheaper manufacturing and shipping costs. Apart from the cheaper costs, the prosperity of the Asia that the factories developing into the main market is necessary. However, there is another concern as well, including the qualities and environmental issue. Additionally, as many factories are migrate to China led to high-unemployed rate in the developed countries such as Mexico and Europe. Therefore, Chanel should keep examining their products to ensure the best quality.

Environmental

It is important to save our energy and material in this day and age so the sustainable environment became a vital conscious and the responsibility for all of the business and human. As a result, Chanel launched its “Winted software” for the use of packaging companies to operate in the cosmetic market that it could reduces the half of the emissions. (Doran 2011) While it showed that it is for the cosmetic market, it could be applied in the packaging of the accessories. In addition, increasing of luxury brands began to create more eco-friendly products; for example, Chanel had released a shopping bag for customers. Moreover, the Chanel bags are timeless and exclusivity, which is very lasting so it would not be too waste material.

Section one: customer profile and market research

Customer profile

Chanel is an international designer brand, which has been well known in 1950s. Chanel had a high reputation and qualities in its product so the price and is obvious high that Chanel should be categories as haute couture fashion. (Graph.3) Beside, the brand identity of Chanel is elegance and classic led to the fact that appealing to consumers who seek to become more graceful. It has been said by Coco Chanel that elegance means being beautiful both on the inside and out that is central concept of the brand; in addition, there are many design was inspired by the femininity as the rising of the women's right. As a result, their original target customers might be middle-aged woman having a reasonable income also independent. However, since Karl Lagerfeld has been the chairman of Chanel, they expended their customer to slightly younger. For example, there are many celebrities like to wear Chanel bag to express their unique style. From those celebrities segmentation could found that the target consumers have expanded to modern and fashionable women. (Figure.2) In addition, Chanel already has long history of the brand so it developed it could keep its initial market and catch the consumers' loyalty, therefore, it also means that it is possible to have some relationship in the heritage consequence which is more mentally affect.

Market research

Furthermore, Chanel brand image for the consumers are classic, exclusivity and quilted lining that might attract more wealthy customers, which could represent their good taste on fashion. Besides, many Chanel customers are desirous to purchase beauty and high quality living standard which might regard as in high-class society. However, Chanel bag did not only focus on fashion trend but it also remains its original design that makes it become so timeless. Just as Gabrielle Chanel had said "above all a style. Fashion passes, style remains."

In order to get a useful marketing plan so choosing two different companies' 2010 annual report, which are Burberry and LVMH because these two companies are belong to luxury level as Chanel's competitors that having the similar target customers. However, there is a big different from these two companies that LVMH is a group of corporate company including many brands such as Louis Vuitton, Dior, Fendi and so on. Basically, the character of these reports is quite different that the report of LVMH is an overview of all group business but according to the Tabel.1, the fashion and leather goods got the highest profit that might indicate that Chanel could more devote to investing their products on accessories section than cosmetic. On the other hand, in the Burberry report contains more detail on their clothing section. (Table.2) Although, it might be slightly different in these two reports, it has showed the similar concept to encourage more investors and attract more shareholders to support them. (LVMH 2010) (Burberry 2011)

Table.1 LVMH 2010 revenue by business group

Table.2 Burberry 2010 Retail and wholesale revenue by product

In addition, it must be recognised that the overseas market has become a significant change in these two reports. (Table.3) As this table point out that the retail network will be expanded into other regions not only in the western world especially in the Asia market. However, comparing to the data could discover some interesting phenomenon that the total market of Burberry are mainly in the west as the Burberry has a strong heritage of Britain but LVMH are more in others market; for example, the totally revenue of LVMH have 16% in Japan because they have designed and combined the oriental element into their products. Therefore, it is a tricky point for Chanel to develop new regions because the company should consider about the culture difference to create their product more acceptable for the new customers.

The reports have expressed a similar viewpoint that the multi-media channel and sustainable environment will be a direction for companies to make efforts in it in the future. Hence, Chanel might aim to develop its online shopping and offer much more convenient location access for consumers. Even though these two reports have different PR style to promote their company, it have remained accurate figure to support their future planning in order to make the company more valuable.

Section two: product and product lifecycle (PLC)

Chanel Classic 2.55 flap bag (right)

Product

The original Chanel 2.55 flap bag was made in February of 1955 so called 2.55. Nevertheless, the original have been a little changed after 1980s by designer Karl Lagerfeld. The notable difference is that the lock on the Reissue is the original lock, which is called “Mademoiselle Lock”, but the Classic one is the “double C” lock. In order to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the 2.55 so Karl Lagerfeld re-made it in February 2005. (Dusil 2007) Whatever Reissue 2.55 flap bags or Classic one, it keeps the legend and value of Chanel to be a global best seller until now.

Core product

2.55 flap bag is an iconic product of Chanel has a high commemoration, which is the first shoulder bag so it is convenient to carry when women go shopping. In addition, making a 2.55 bag require a delicate manufacturing process that means it should in a best quality to stratify the need of customers. Moreover, as the 2.55 flap bag has been sell over fifty years so the customers might have an exceptional attach with the brand.

Tangible product

Perceptibly, the branding is a big reason for customers to buy it because of the high reputation of the brand. Besides, the design feature might be another justification such as the quilted leather and the chain shoulder straps, which are a signature of Chanel products. Also the iconic locking with the trademark gives it tangible value. In addition, multi-layer pockets inside of the bag let it become more functional. Although the original 2.55 bags only have four colour but nowadays there are more choice of colour and sizing for the Classic 2.55. The packaging keeps it simple using black and white to decorate it that still remains its own sense of quality. (Figure.4)

Figure.4
Packaging of Chanel

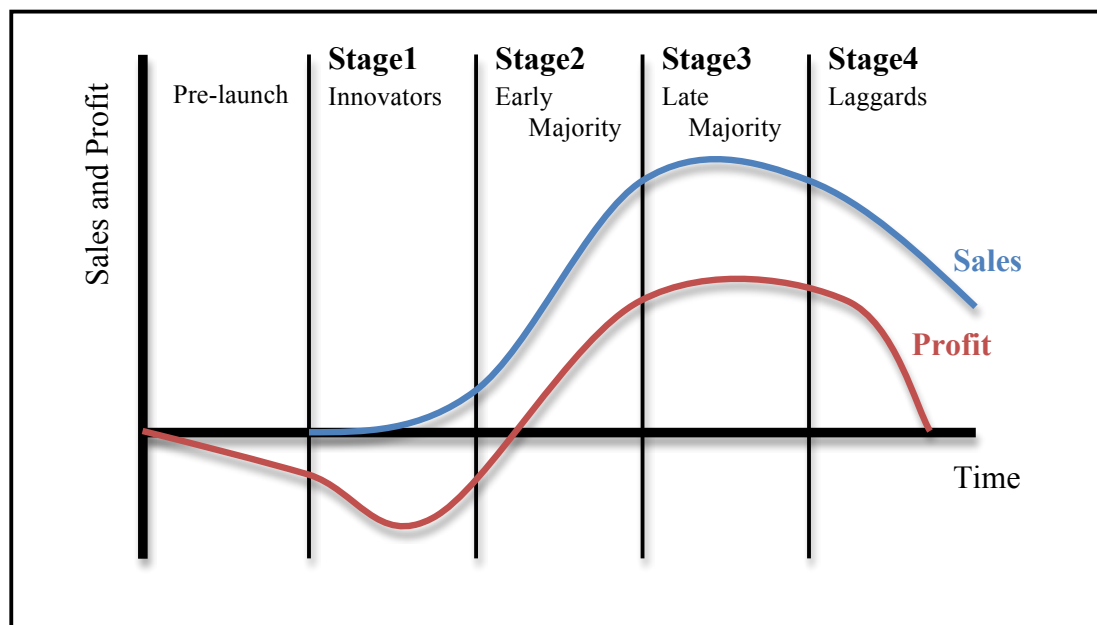

Augmented product

Chanel is regarded as a luxury brand so it should have high-class serving. In addition, it is must to have a warranty period that could get the customer loyalty because of the guarantee. It also give customer knowledge to protect from buying the counterfeit product through the website. Apart from those services, we can find the new creation and information through the website or smart phone.

Potential product

Even though the Classic 2.55 bags already have had different colour, the Reissue 2.55 only have four colour so it might be an potential to make more colour in Reissue 2.55. Moreover, it should establish its official online shopping website that makes customer more convenient to buy the Chanel bag in fear of the counterfeit.

Graph.4 Product lifecycle diagram

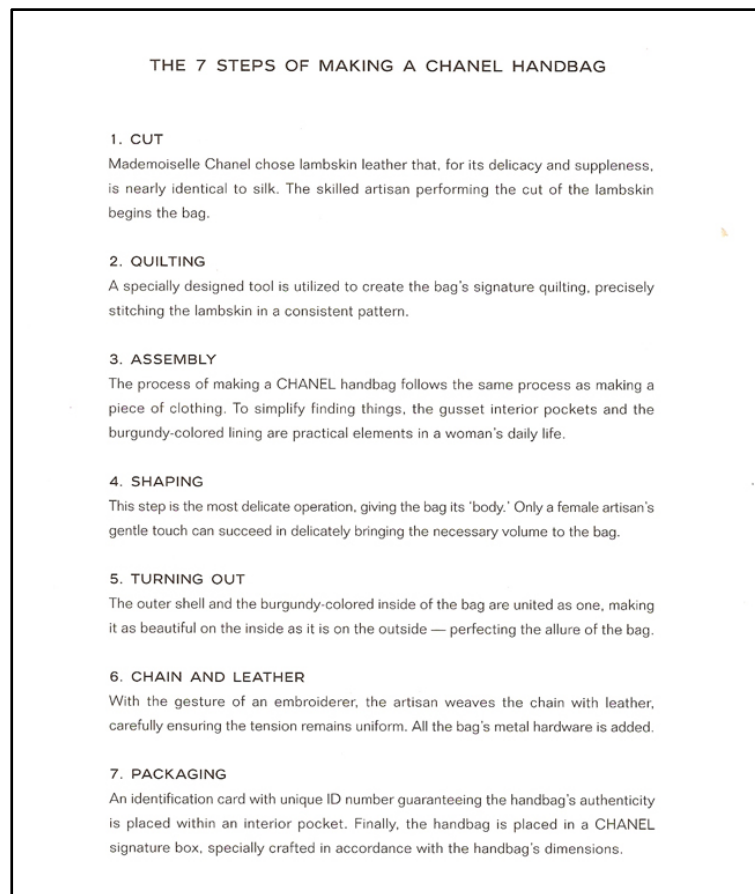

Product lifecycle

It is generally recognised that there are four stages in the PLC diagram. (Graph.4) The first stage start from launching a new product and then because of the promotion and popularity that will rapidly make a huge profit in stage two. However, in the end of the stage three, as the competition and products become unfashionable that the sales begin to decline and will be gone and make no profit in stage four. It is very true in most of the product practically in the fashion market but it did not apply on Chanel 2.55 bags. The reason why it did not apply on Chanel 2.55 that Chanel bags making with a sophisticated process so it will not make a huge stock, therefore, it could remain its value in high price. (Figure.5) In addition, 2.55 bag is classic and suit for any type of wearing. It is clear that Chanel bag will be exclusive and did not fit in the PLC diagram also have good sales for over fifty years.

New product line

Although Chanel 2.55 bag will not become a laggard, it is still important for Chanel to launch a new product line because it is very competitive in the fashion industry. Besides, the fashion trend will be change every season so that the companies should adopt the new trend to create new product in order to keep ahead of the fashion. For example, Chanel launched a new product line called “Mademoiselle” in Spring 2011. This product line remains the quilted leather, which is the iconic feature of Chanel but also design to be a bowling style bag that makes the bag looking edgy and modern. Apart from the character of the product, Chanel employed an American actress, Blake Lively to be their new brand endorsement. Chanel is quite brave to use a young actress to be their new face because launching a new product line has had potential risk such as investment cost. Furthermore, Chanel wants to expend their target customers to younger generation like Blake Lively who is only 25 years old. Whereas, during the economic rescission it is under high risk that younger generation might not have extra money to spend on the luxury goods. On the other hand, the brand reputation and designer effect could still get the customer's loyalty. As a result, pricing is a significant strategy to a new product line.

Pricing

There are many types of pricing strategies for a new product such as prestige pricing, premium pricing and price skimming. (Kotler et al. 2005, p.688-701) In the Table.4 could find that the same type of bag due to different material and brand having a wide range of pricing. Especially for the high-end brand like Chanel, the company should keep their pricing higher and stocking in lower volumes to maintain their exclusivity. Likewise, the material is play an important part in it which could be seen from the Table.4 that the leather product will be more expensive than the polyurethane one; in particular the lambskin leather is much more valuable so that the Chanel bag fixed their price over 1,500 pounds. Moreover, making a Chanel bag needs high-quality material and huge artificial skill so the manufacturing costs will be slightly higher which is the prestige pricing strategy because the high standard could catch the customers' loyalty. Also the branding could added "premium" value to the customers led to Chanel could make their price at 2,100 pounds.

Figure.7

rue Cambon, Paris

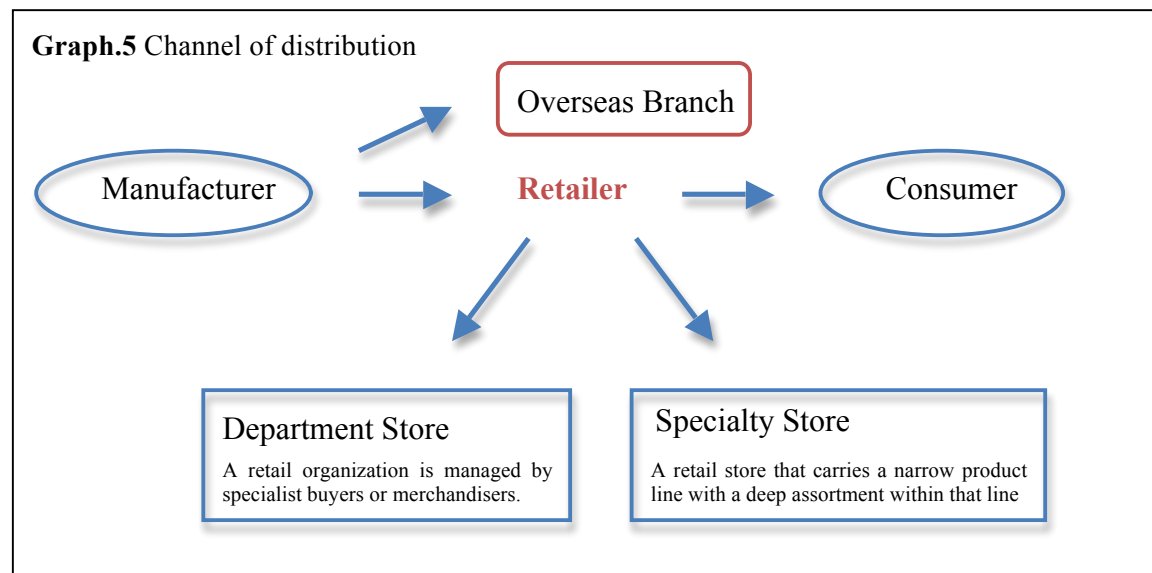

Place

In spite of the pricing, placing is another element in the marketing mix. Therefore, the anticipation of the store interior and windows display should be gracious and elegant in Chanel boutiques matching to its brand identities. Undoubtedly, walking into Chanel boutique is nice and comfortable because of the considerate service and exquisite decoration. Before going inside the boutique, the strong black and white colour with its symbolic logos and fonts might catch the customers' attention. In addition, the window display of Chanel is creative and also expressing its manifestation of classic fashion. Though Chanel did not have an official online-shop website, it offers customers an E-brochure to catch the new released products.

Figure.8
Window display at
Harrods, London

As an immortal brand, the distribution channel of Chanel used is indirect marketing channel but it is a fairly different from high street brands. (Graph.5) As Chanel holds the principle of giving the best service for customers; it did have too many emerging retailers to sell their product (exclusive the cosmetic market that has franchise). In fact, the accessories products only sell in own specialty store and some specific department store such as Harrods and Selfridges due to Chanel do not want to over expose the brand to keep their brand value as classic.

Conclusion

According to previous sections, it is fairly certain that the marketing mix elements have a strong linkage with each other that includes the 7Ps (product, pricing, place, promote, process, physical evidence and people). Owing to get the competitive advantage that a brand should acquire its position including the customer segmentation and target market which have been mentioned in section one. Added to this, in section two revealing how a product to be characteristic because it is important for a brand, product or service to be differentiated in a unique way from competitors. (Posener 2011, p.60) In spite of the product, the marketing strategies for launching a new product and place element will affect sales and market that have been discussed in section three. That is meant to be more consumers based that it is important for a fashion brand to concern more about the consumers need and want. In conclusion, it is important for Chanel to do a marketing strategy and planning in order to adopt the new trend. In this way, based on the SWOT analysis (Table.5) Chanel might face some challenge and opportunities in the future.

Table.5 SWOT analysis

STRENGTHS	WEAKNESS
1. Prestige of the brand 2. Metal connection with the brand: loyalty 3. Designer endorsement: Karl Lagerfeld in charge of the campaign 4. Advertising: using new face of the celebrities 5. High qualities of the product 6. Strong management and design	1. The risk of the new product line 2. Lack of the official online shopping 3. Not too many distribution channel: most of the boutiques are located in the mega city 4. In shortage of the human resource: need professional seller
OPPORTUNITIES	THREATS
1. Developing new market to emerging countries 2. Opening trade policy could bring more marketplaces 3. Expanding consumer group: middle class women and enlarging age level 4. Marketing innovation: fashion show, social media and website 5. Devoting to the suitable environment: eco-packaging and secondhand market	1. High imported tariff in emerging markets 2. Highly competition with the big companies such as LVMH 3. Overseas problem: diversity culture led to different need and want 4. Currency and cash flow

First, as the globalisation Chanel has been expanded its international market but it conceals many potential risks such as different shopping behaviour and customs duties. Although it contains many points that need to be considered, Chanel could start from introducing the historical prestige of the brand and combining the local character to promote their product and increase their overseas market. Second, technology advanced quickly so the digitalisation certainly became a part of our life; therefore, E-commerce it is necessary for Chanel that they could get the consumer patterns through it. Also the revolution of new media might impact on the commercial strategies; for instance, iPad and Smartphone become popular that consumers might change their shopping habit to buy the product through the technology, which is instant and convenient. However, in order to keep exclusivity of Chanel brand value that it might not launching on-line shopping website because it regards to the services and product quality. Chanel could fuse the music and high-tech making an interactive program to appeal more consumers. Last but no least, the consumer trend has been changing recently, in that case, consumer groups need to be observed and kept updating. Besides, consumers in luxury market became more complicate and cross over age-level widely so customisation is suit for the prospects of Chanel. To sum up, Chanel must have a clear brand position and target that will not give up their exclusive and classic statue because of the brand value but it still need to accept the environment change and new fashion trend. If Chanel can put those points into practice, it will surely hold its place in luxury market and become more successful.
